

Dialogue: [episode 13]

May: We still have some time to understand more about what Doug's Harvest Festival means.

Nana: Yes. I want to know more about it too.

Cooper: We can share the work.

Dean: I know a website that we can check for information on aboriginal cultures.

Cooper: The question is, what do people want to know?

Nana: I think at the very least we can look at the 5 "w"s and the 1 "h."

Dean: First, we should find out the origin, purpose, and features of the Harvest Festival. We also need to know what happens in it.

May: Right. That way, we won't make fools of ourselves with the ceremony.

Cooper: Exactly. We need to know more about both the concepts and the practicalities.

Nana: All of this is about the content. So, shall we divide the work by the content?

Dean: I suggest that we divide the work by multimedia tools that we can use in the presentation. For example, one of us can be responsible for the music, and another can search for video files or visual aids.

Cooper: Great! Then by working together we can confirm that the content is right. I'll handle the video part!

Dean: I'll look for the music.

May: I'll put all the information on the Internet together.

Nana: And I'll make the Power Point.

May: Wow, we're really on top of this. We're a real team!

Dean: No problem. First act, and then talk.

Cooper: Yes, the first step in creativity is to make a start. Once we get everything all settled, then we can assemble the content.
